THE VANILLA shop

PACKAGING & BRAND REVIEW

From a shelf of strangers to one family.

What we changed across the range, why, and where The Vanilla Shop stands now: extracts, tea, bath bars, candles and the tote.

Thirteen products, six visual languages.

The range as it appears on thevanillashop.lk today. Every product was designed on its own: white-and-gold bottle labels, yellow floral soap boxes, kraft pouches with paper stickers, cloth bags, a green tea box and a black floral hamper. Each one is fine by itself. Together, they don’t look like one shop.

Good products, let down by their packs.

1

No family resemblance

The logo appears in a black square, a gold square, a sticker and plain. Type, colour and illustration change from product to product, so a customer who loves the extract has no visual cue that the soap comes from the same people.

2

Decoration over information

Ornate gold frames, busy all-over florals and small centred text. The product name is often the third thing you see.

3

Text that undermines trust

Unfinished headlines ("...Bathing Bar by"), misspellings ("benifits"), inconsistent spellings of the shop's own name, broken Tamil characters, and incomplete ingredient lists.

4

Nothing says "our own farm"

The brand's strongest story, vanilla grown on its own farms in Sri Lanka, was a line of small print rather than the reason to buy.

One brand. Each line dressed for its own shelf.

Tea is bought by tea drinkers; soap is bought by everyone. Rather than force one look onto very different categories, each line got the look its shoppers expect, and all of them share five signals that carry the brand from one to the next.

LINE	WHO BUYS IT	WHAT IT MUST SAY	HOW THE DESIGN SAYS IT
Extracts	Home bakers, cooks; informed buyers	Purity, origin, how to use	Painted vanilla, numbered range, full information
Tea	Tea drinkers, gifting, tourists	Ceylon, provenance, calm	Painted botanical on cream, Ceylon Tea lion, brewing guide
Bath bars	Everyone, often on impulse	Pretty, gentle, which scent	Soft colour-coded bloom, big clear names, gold foil
Candles	Everyone, mostly as a gift	Mood, a present that looks expensive	Deep colour, bold name, painted florals
Tote	Fans, tourists	Heritage, craft, Sri Lanka	Engraved Ceylon scene, one ink

SHARED BY EVERY LINE

The logo	On every product, never altered.
The vanilla flower	Somewhere on every pack, drawn to suit the line.
Serif names	Product names in a serif; details in spaced capitals.
Printed, not digital	Warm grounds, grain and texture; no gloss.
Our own farms	The origin claim on every pack.

What every designer works from.

BEFORE

AFTER

Split label

Painted vanilla on one side, clean information on the other; the label reads at a glance.

No. 01 · 02 · 03

Alcoholic extract, non-alcoholic extract and syrup become a collectable, numbered set, each with its own colour.

Same information

Every fact from the old labels is kept, re-set to be readable; the history line was corrected.

Print-ready

500, 200 and 100 ml labels and neck seals, with bleed and cut lines.

From a kraft pouch with a sticker to a Ceylon tea box.

AFTER

A real box

A 25-bag and a 12-bag carton replace the pouch, so the tea can sit on a shelf and be given as a gift.

Painted vanilla

Flower, vine and cured pods, painted to match the extracts.

Ceylon credentials

The Ceylon Tea lion and “Authentic Ceylon” up front; a simple brewing guide on the side.

Editable files

Dielines and fronts in several colourways for the team to adapt.

Same box, a completely different feeling.

BEFORE

AFTER

Same die, same print

The folded octagon box is unchanged; only the artwork is new.

Colour tells you which

Honey, rose, charcoal and aloe glow on a light, grainy paper; a shopper finds their scent instantly.

"Vanilla" in gold foil

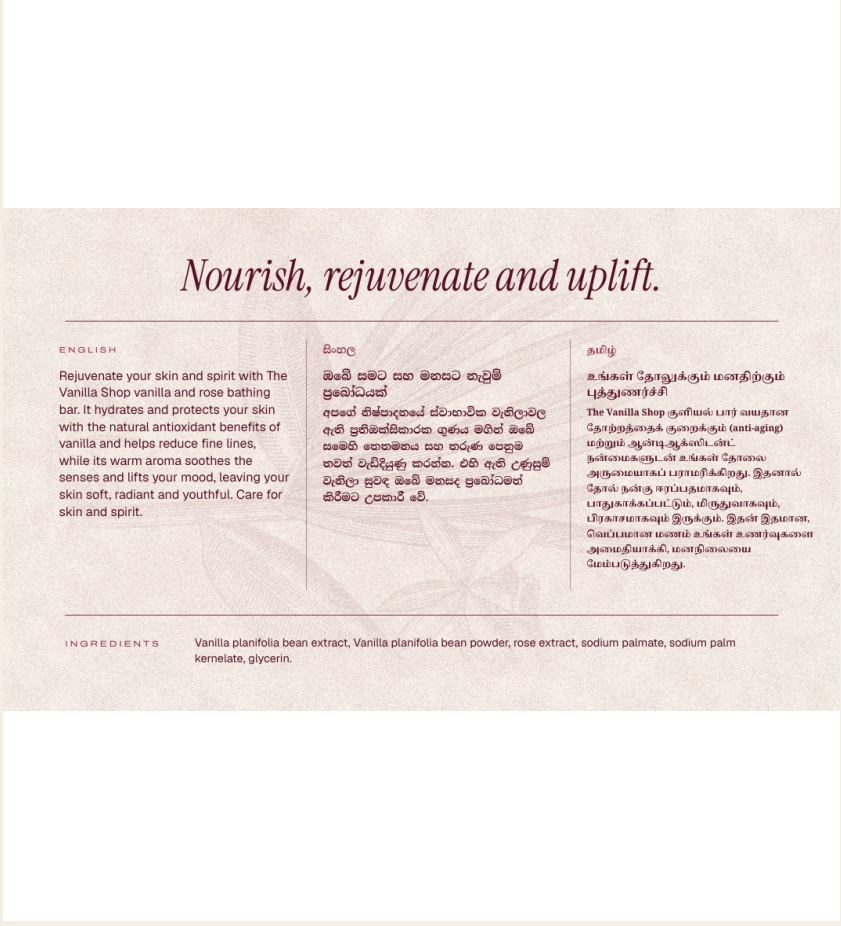

Every bar opens with the same foiled word, so the four read as one set.

Clearer names

Vanilla Bathing Bar · Vanilla & Rose · Vanilla & Charcoal+ · Vanilla & Aloe Vera.

Built to be picked up and turned over.

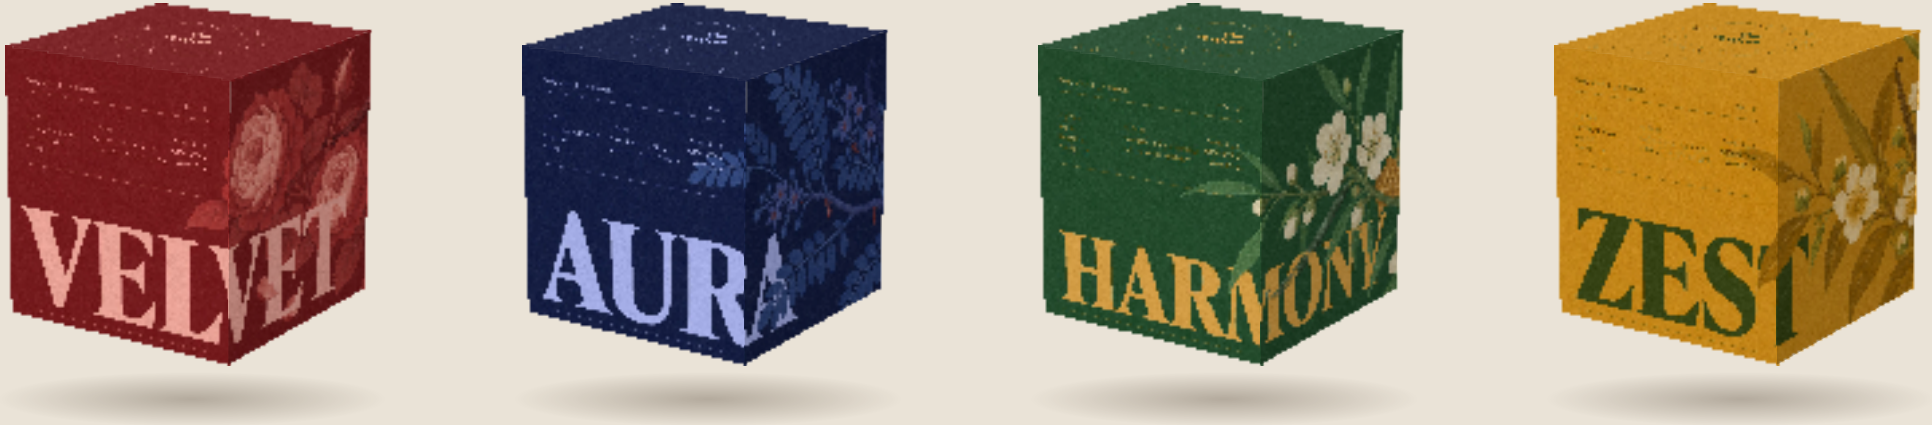

The back carries the brand's engraved vanilla as a faint watermark and a small gold-foil pod; the flower wraps over the walls. Text is in English, Sinhala and Tamil, set properly, with the typos of the old box corrected.

A new gift line: four moods, four colours.

Velvet, Aura, Harmony and Zest. Each box is one deep colour with its own painted florals and a bold name, made to look like a present before it is wrapped.

09 · THE TOTE

The brand you carry out of the shop.

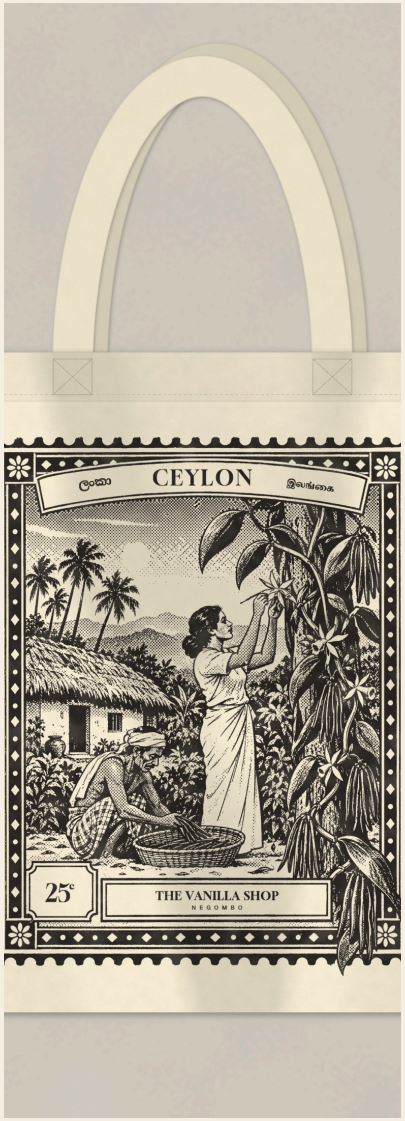

A one-ink screen print: an engraved Ceylon harvest scene inside a stamp, drawn as a comic-era halftone. One colour keeps it affordable to print and easy to reorder.

One shop, five lines, unmistakably related.

What's done, and what the team finishes.

Ready for print

Extract labels: three sizes plus neck seals, with bleed and cut lines.

Bath bars: print, foil-plate and proof files for all four boxes.

Tote: one-ink print film.

Ready to adapt

Tea: editable dielines and fronts.

Candles: editable box and label files for four scents.

To confirm before printing

Barcodes, dates and TFM for Charcoal+ and Aloe Vera; net weight of the bars (100 g or 114 g).

Full ingredient lists per product; a native-speaker check of Sinhala and Tamil; cosmetic claims against NMRA rules.

A physical foil proof and a check of every die against the printer's.
